Hello Mr. Colbert:

My name is Loretha Gross, and I am now a Marketing student at COD in Wheaton, Illinois. One of my assignments was Metlife. I recently (in 2002, I believe) read in Chicago SunTimes newspaper about the Metropolitan Life fraud. The paper also asked former Metropolitan insurers to jump on board for the class action suit. I remember my mother had a Metropolitan life insurance policy for as long as I can remember. At that time, the insurance person it seemed was at our door collecting the insurance every week. When my mom died, we could not find her insurance policies and could not get any feedback from Metropolitan Life. My sisters and I were very young with no business experience; therefore, we gave pursuing the issue and went into debt to bury her. After I saw the ad, I decided to go for the case action suit for my mother, but I procrastinated and the deadline came and went.

I just wanted to say thank you for helping elderly people who were paying for years on a policies which should had matured. We need more honest people like you helping humanity.

HAVE A BLESSED DAY!
